

Name _____

Quote Accurately

Practice

Read the following selection. Write your answers on the lines and in the chart and then print this page.

The fight for women’s rights started with the fight to end slavery. Beginning in the 1820s, many women became active in the struggle for the abolition (ab-uh-LISH-uhn), or end, of slavery.

One woman who worked hard to fight slavery was Lucretia Mott. In 1833, she started a women’s antislavery society in Philadelphia. She went to London to attend the first World’s Anti-Slavery Convention. Women had to sit behind a curtain. They couldn’t be seen or heard. Lucretia Mott was furious.

Also attending the London convention was Elizabeth Cady Stanton. She, too, was angry at the limited role that women were allowed. Even though Mott was some 20 years older than Stanton, they became friends.

The two friends began to talk with other women who were working to free the slaves. They talked about how hard women’s lives were. They talked about the need to make changes. They talked about how they might work together to fight for their own rights.

1. How did the women’s rights movement start? Use text evidence in your answer. Remember to quote facts accurately.

Part 2 READING: INFORMATIONAL TEXT

2.1 Key Ideas and Details

Name _____

2. Use this chart to help you find explicit examples and details from text to make inferences. Remember that...

What I Read	What I Know	Inference